A Word from Jussi Tähtinen, CEO

Expanding our business to self-publishing

We started the execution of our new strategy in 2017. Our strategy aims for growth, consisting of two key operations: 1) Self-publishing a portfolio of mobile games, based on our own IPs and 2) Offering our development services to leading companies in the industry. During the 2nd half of 2017, we expanded our business to self-publishing as planned, while maintaining good progress on the service business at the same time.

We announced our first self-published game "Medals of War" in April and opened up the first public test market in May. Nitro Games went public on Nasdaq First North Stockholm in June. At the same time, we opened up more markets for public testing according to our MVP-process. We released "Medals of War" in 77 countries on Apple iPhone and iPad at the end of September. Our launch was supported by visibility in the Apple App Store through featuring in 18 countries, including the United States. This was the starting point for the launch in the western markets. We then expanded our focus to the Android version, and the game entered open beta in the Google Play store in November. This Open beta test is currently ongoing and supported by Google with early access featuring in 69 countries. Open beta means that the game is offered for players to test on Android while we're still finalizing the actual launch version.

Our strategy for self-publishing is that we self-publish our own games in the western markets, and for other markets, we seek partnerships with leading publishers that have local market expertise. We signed Medals of War for Turkey and MEA markets with Netmarble EMEA in October. After careful customization and local market adaptation done together with them, the game was launched in the first markets by Netmarble EMEA in December.

The next steps with Medals of War launch in 2018 are releasing it also on Google Play so that the game is available on both Apple and Google platforms in the western markets published by Nitro Games, and getting the game launched by Netmarble EMEA in Turkey and MEA markets.

The results from Medals of War launch so far are encouraging. With our MVP process, we have improved on our user acquisition efficiency by decreasing the cost of a new install on a monthly basis, while at the same time we've increased the monetization of the game. We've already succeeded in ROAS positive user acquisition, resulting in our best performing marketing campaigns returning more money than what goes into them. With our continuous efforts in improving the game based on the performance indicators, we're aiming to increase the scale of these successes and the game itself by expanding on marketing activities resulting in more downloads and revenue.

The free-to-play business model essentially means that we're building games as a service and that we seek for constant improvement and long lifetime for our games by providing our players with a constantly updating and improving service. It's often said that free-to-play is not a sprint, but a marathon. I feel that we're doing well with our marathon so far, while we're looking forward to a long, demanding but rewarding run ahead of us. Generally, the lifetime of games in this category could last up to 5 years.

In our self-publishing business, our goal is building a portfolio of games, utilizing our technology NG Platform and our MVP-process. During the fourth quarter, we've progressed further with our 2nd game. This game is yet un-announced and planned for release in 2018.

Nitro Games performed a directed share issue in October raising SEK 25 million, to further support the scale-up of our self-publishing.

In our service business, we utilize our experienced team and our capabilities by offering services for industryleading companies. Our focus here has been in the production of the mobile game that we are developing with Wargaming. This project is moving forward steadily, and in October we signed an amendment with Wargaming to expand the project scope, resulting in approximately 0.4 MEUR increased revenue for us.

Towards the end of 2017, we also saw growth in the team size and the expertise and capabilities of the team. To support the increased scope with the Wargaming project, the needs with the new version of Medals of War we're doing with Netmarble and our un-announced games, as well as to help us achieve our goals for our self-publishing, we've managed to increase our headcount to 36 at the end of 2017. Despite the hiring being a challenge in the industry in general, we've succeeded in finding the right talents we need, while minimizing the delays in our own projects. We've also hired some new staff in early 2018 to support our growth further.

During 2017 we've seen an increase in revenues. Compared to the full year 2016, our revenues increased 107% from 828 KEUR to 1,716 KEUR. During Q4, the revenues were 517 KEUR compared to 69 KEUR in 2016 (652 % increase). Most significantly we managed to grow the revenues in our self-publishing business towards the end of the year, representing 27% of revenues in H2 2017, while in H1 the self-publishing business only accounted for 1% of our revenues.

Overall we had a strong start for our new strategy during 2017. We are looking forward to continue seeking growth and increasing shareholder value in 2018. To support this with new types of opportunities, Nitro Games aims to be an active player in the consolidation of the mobile games market.

- The Monetization of the game is measured with ARPU (Average Revenue Per User) and ARPDAU (Average Revenue Per Daily Active User). ARPU is used to measure how much revenue can be expected from each player over a period of 30 days and ARPDAU is used to measure how any changes made in the game, e.g. engagement campaigns, are affecting the monetization performance.
